

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS: DACA

- Current DACA recipients will maintain their deferred action status and work permits until they expire.
- The administration won't consider new applications for DACA dated after September 5, 2017. However, if your application was filed before September 5th and is currently pending it will continue to be processed and adjudicated on a case by case basis.
 - Anyone whose deferred action status expires in the next six months (between now and March 5, 2018), can apply for a renewal. This also applies to work permits that expire in the next six months. Those applications for renewal must be submitted in the next month, by October 5, 2017. These applications will be adjudicated on a case by case basis.
- Anyone whose DACA expires on or after March 6, 2018 will not have an opportunity to renew, and their work permit and deferred action status will end on their individual expiration dates.
- DACA recipients will no longer be able to apply for permission to travel outside the United States (“advance parole”).
- If your work permit is still valid your employer cannot fire you, put you on leave, or change your work status.
- If your expiration date is nearing, your employer may ask you for an updated work permit but cannot take any action against you until after it is expired.
- Your Social Security Number (SSN) is a valid SSN number for life, even once your work permit and DACA approval expires.
